25 January 2015 - Third Sunday in Ordinary Time

Psalter: Week III

Cycle: B

Year I

[...] It was decisive for Paul to know the community of those who called themselves disciples of Jesus. Through them he came to know a new faith that places not so much the Law of God at the centre but rather the person of Jesus, to whom was now linked the remission of sins. As a zealous Jew, he held this message unacceptable, even scandalous, and he therefore felt the duty to persecute the followers of Christ even outside of Jerusalem. It was precisely on the road to Damascus at the beginning of the 30s A.D. that, according to his words, "Christ made me his own". In his Letters he goes directly to the essential and speaks not only of a vision, but of an illumination, and above all of a revelation and of a vocation in the encounter with the Risen One. In fact, he will explicitly define himself as "apostle by vocation" or "apostle by the will of God", as if to emphasize that his conversion was not the result of a development of thought or reflection, but the fruit of divine intervention, an unforeseeable, divine grace. Henceforth, all that had constituted for him a value paradoxically became, according to his words, a loss and refuse. And from that moment all his energy was placed at the exclusive service of Jesus Christ and his Gospel. His existence would become that of an Apostle who wants to "become all things to all men" without reserve. From here we draw a very important lesson: what counts is to place Jesus Christ at the centre of our lives, so that our identity is marked essentially by the encounter, by communion with Christ and with his Word. In his light every other value is recovered and purified from possible dross. [...]
